Organic Supply Chains benefit

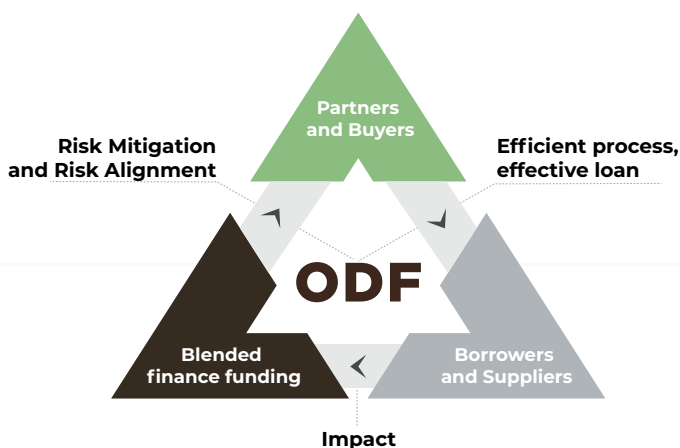

Climate change and environmental degradation pose significant risks to global food supply chains and disproportionately affect emerging markets. By scaling organic farming in emerging markets, the benefits are multiple:

The Challenge

SMEs in the country of origin lack funding and opportunities to improve yields or scale. International buyers do not have the resources or risk appetite to pre-finance goods at scale. At the same time, investors looking to make an impact often struggle to access local projects and the necessary expertise.

Market driven approach with global reach

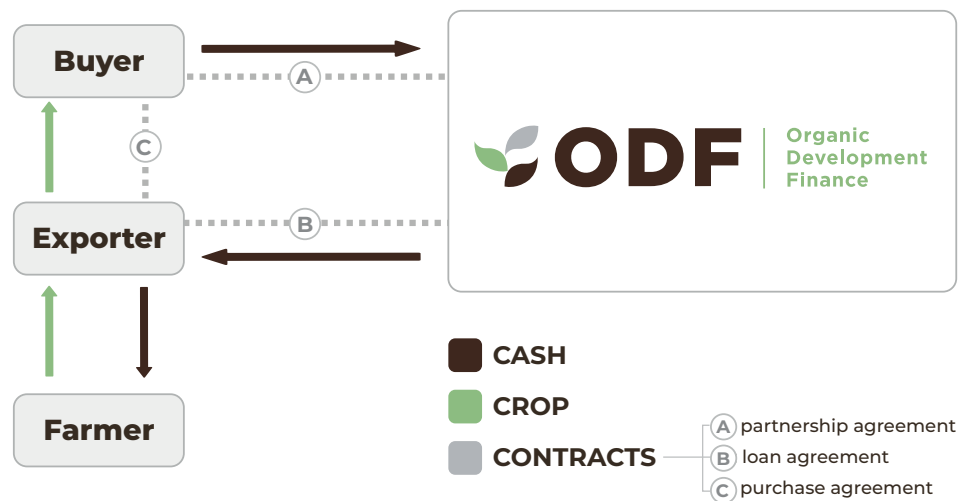

Blended finance vehicle managed by experienced and independent fund manager FOUNT: risk diversification, leverage and affordability

Partnership with buyers: efficient business development, due diligence- and transaction structuring process, facilitating technical assistance

Impact driven support to Suppliers with the aim to increase land under organic practice and improve farmer income

The ODF offering

Organic Development Facility offers timely, affordable and standardised pre-export finance loans (avg EUR/ USD 0,5-2mln) to suppliers in emerging markets in order to scale their organic operations.
